ABOUT THE CANADIAN RADIOTHERANOSTICS LEADERS' SUMMIT

The Canadian Radiotheranostics Leaders' Summit (CRLS) is an annual, pan-Canadian event hosted by the Canadian Nuclear Isotope Council and a consortium of academic centres (UHN, LHSC, BC Cancer, and CAMH) that brings industry and academia together for two days of engaging presentations, discussions, and networking opportunities.

Each year, the event attracts leaders from across the global isotope supply chain, business and investment communities, government representatives, healthcare leaders, academics, students, and more.

Canada's isotope ecosystem is driven by key partnerships and collaborations that are fueling innovation, enabling new clinical applications, and encouraging new approaches and technologies to produce key emerging isotopes.

Ensuring equal access to radiopharmaceuticals and diagnostic scans, in addition to effectively incorporating radiotheranostics into cancer care, requires transdisciplinary collaboration between radiation oncologists, nuclear medicine physicians and technologists, radiologists, radiation and imaging scientists, along with dedicated infrastructure and a specialized supply chain. While Canada does possess much talent in this space, innovative models of care, infrastructure, and patient partnerships are needed to translate this exciting science into access to care and improved survival from cancer.

WHY ATTEND THE CANADIAN RADIOTHERANOSTICS LEADERS' SUMMIT

Purpose of the CRLS

The Canadian isotope industry is experiencing tremendous momentum. Collaboration has allowed for cutting-edge innovation and technologies to resolve supply challenges and produce emerging isotopes. As such, Canada is developing an ecosystem with a broader scope, drawing expertise from across the medical community, the isotope production chain, and the radiopharmaceutical industry. The medical community is heightening the value of radiotheranostics through high-quality clinical trials, which are starting to show proof of improved cancer patient survival. Effectively incorporating radiotheranostics into cancer care requires transdisciplinary collaboration of highly skilled professionals along with dedicated infrastructure.

While Canada does possess much expertise already, innovative models of care, infrastructure, and patient partnerships are needed to translate this exciting science into access to care and improved survival from cancer.

This Summit brings together all of the pieces necessary to take a unified leap together for the future of cancer care.

DATES

Monday, May 10 &
Tuesday, May 11, 2027

KEY OBJECTIVES:

This two-day event will allow leaders to:

- Ensure their views on the broader ecosystem are heard and understood
- Express their concerns or raise awareness about challenges to the sector
- Learn how government is responding to these challenges with policies and programs
- Provide input into a coordinated strategy to secure Canadian isotope supply chains, innovation, and a thriving healthcare sector
- Learn about up-to-date research, emerging clinical applications, and innovative infrastructure projects
- Understand how key players can enable transformation and best support the Canadian radiotheranostics community

“The Summit offers an incredible opportunity to network and learn from those working all across the country and beyond to deliver lifesaving isotopes to the world.”
